There are so-called "moonlight views," but they are taken at sunrise and printed dark. The Philadelphia Photographer of February, 1882, says moonlight photographs never have been taken, and the author gives it as his opinion that the feat is impossible. This speaks well for the public spirit and energy of both owner and occupant, as neither party was insured.

How He Captured Two Crows.

The following crow story is vouched for by a reliable gentleman, who dwells in the marshes of Totuskey: Daniel Thompson, a colored man, was driving along the road on Monday, when his attention was attracted by two crows that were apparently engaged in a mortal combat. Taking in the situation at a glance, the old fellow crept quietly up to the scene of action and deftly placed his bag over the combatants—both of which he bore off in triumph. One has since died from his wounds, but the other is still a captive in Uncle Daniel's cabin.—

Never in the history of our State has such a tide of immigration poured into her borders. We attribute this to many causes. One of the first is that the northern press, recognizing the great advantages of our location, climate, cheap lands, and facilities for shipping to other markets, unsurpassed by any State in the Union, have in the last year advised their readers to go South instead of West. Our books will show more sales of land the last year to a better class of northern and western and European farmers than have ever moved to Virginia before. We are so much encouraged by our success during the past year that we have decided to take our "yorkhown becorated Trent," with thousands of our VIRGINIA REAL ESTATE JOURNAL to the fairs of the Middle and Western States this summer. If satisfactory arrangements can be made with the railroads we propose having built a decorated advertising car, with adjustable axies, to go from State to State, with a corps of clerks distributing the VIRGINIA REAL ESTATE JOURNAL free, offering its cheap lands to all.
